WRITING FUNDAMENTALS - GROUP CLASS (for high school students)

Mercer Education’s WRITING FUNDAMENTALS GROUP CLASS provides high school students with a weekly opportunity to engage in the full writing process and receive in-depth, extended guidance and feedback from a highly qualified and experienced writing teacher. The objective of the class is to give students the composition skills they need and the confidence that comes from knowing they can mature as writers and effectively communicate their thoughts and opinions. The class focuses on a step-by-step approach to systematically teach and explicitly model writing strategies for writing expository essays. Students engage in the full writing process with each assignment from brainstorming ideas to planning, organizing, drafting, and revising. Using an established rubric, students practice peer-editing skills and learn to carefully self-edit their own work with the goal of becoming independent, self-guided, competent writers.

The weekly class meetings offer students the time and opportunity necessary to achieve the level of written competence and fluency they need in an increasingly text-filled, information-laden world where the ability to communicate effectively is essential. Each 5-month fall and spring semester class has its own unique content with no repetition of material so that students can attend up to four consecutive semesters (two academic years) and work with challenging new assignments. Though the majority of ME students enroll on an ongoing basis in order to strengthen and refine their composition skills, ME’s 2-month enrollment cycle provides maximum flexibility so that students can determine how long they want to attend. Students may enroll at any time (enrolling midway through the course is no problem) and receive a free assessment, after which they are assigned to appropriate groups according to level and availability.
